Introduction-...

Harmony School goes to the movies. Ok, we can live with that--movies shape who we are, were, and will be. They merge fantasy with reality. Take note of the celebrities included in this issue--an admittedly unique combination of movie stars & politicians. This was not intentional, but rather the result of casting a broad net and seeing who responded. Hence, we find Dorris Day and Annette Funicello beside Sophia Loren and Brigitte Bardot. All four playing significant roles in defining the image of women in 1960's films. And Elvira churning that same pot 20 years later. And likewise, we have Nicholas Cage and the "Roc" shaping our notion of the modern male--handsome, powerful. But let us not be fooled, in a political year, it's the politician that can make the most impact as Giuliani, Ron Paul, and Mark Krizan have shown.

The 2007-2008 year showed some remarkable and memorable happenings at Rhino's. We hosted an incredible roster of national and international talent (Japan-Canada-France-and more!), we saw some old friends, and kept with our promise of delivering the best in regional and local talent. The youth involvement in the weekend entertainment expanded this fall with the creation of an official Rhino's street team in the early fall of 2007 that continues to meet every Friday at 5pm. In addition to our successful year in entertainment, Rhino's afterschool programs showed outstanding numbers in attendance and some incredible work.

Ross Eats Cow

When the news of Ross eating a colossal 6 paddy hamburger spread quickly around the school, no one expected he could ever top his new record. However, lo and behold, Ross took the next step today, eating an entire cow. It began at 9 o'clock when several people heard mooing from the kitchen and went down to investigate. There they found Ross trying to shove the entire cow into the oven, though. shortly thereafter, he decided to eat it raw. He began from the back, and by 3 o'clock had skeletonized 78% of the animal, and by 5 o'clock cheers were heard as Ross finished the job. Those who wish to congratulate Ross can find him at Bloomington Hospital.

with popular computer game World of Warcraft. In World of Cracraft, or WoC as it is known to its small but devoted group of fans, you play as a high school math teacher. Jon was shocked to see that the chance to live his thrilling life has met with very disappointing sales. "Who wouldn't want to write computer programs and sing songs about your life to confused students? I don't understand the appeal of being a powerful warrior whose very footsteps shake the ground he walks on. There's nothing fun about creating a deadly spellcaster who casts dark spells from a world beyond to vanquish foes whose name alone is enough to kill a weaker man. Nothing at all."

close to finding cure for Middle School

A recent scientific breakthrough has shocked the foundations of Harmony School. The High School chemistry class has developed an elixir that may prove to be the cure for Midulus Scholi Syndrome, long thought to be incurable. The disease has ravaged many students between the ages of 12 and 14. Among the freshman class, it is visible in almost every one of the students. If the serum does cure the disorder, it will prove to be a landmark in high school science classes.

in the study of today's youth. And it seems that there is a new phenomenon within this group of, may I say, 'hip' youngsters. This 'excitement', is as surprising as it is crucial to understand for the future of all education. My hope is to come to a better understanding of the nature of this occurrence, and to find ways to both containing and harnessing this rising energy in the near future. For now, I will express the details of my most recent study on excitement, in which I interviewed several youngsters and even a faculty member. Goodbye for now. Or as the youngsters would say: 'Keep it hip Daddio.'

When I came on the scene, the kids were excited. To see just how excited, I asked them if they found my interview with them exciting. For some, a simple "yes" was sufficient. For others, however, that was not enough.

"Woo, exciting!" exclaimed High School student Silas Jackson during an interview. He said that he was "...personally excited about the new pencil excitement plan. A plan designed to excite the populace about pencils."

But according to foreign language teacher, Zeri Ort, it's not just the pencil that's exciting. "...What's almost as exciting is that if you mess up you can use the very exciting eraser to change it.

After answering my questions involving excitement and pencils, I moved on to what is perhaps the key point of this study: metaphors.

To some, it wasn't anything new. "Like I don't already?" replied a local high school student known by some as 'Applecakes" when asked whether she thought that everyday instances could be made more exciting with the use of metaphors. Others, however, were new to this invigorating idea.

"I think that would be awesome!" exclaimed another high school student wishing to remain anonymous. When I offered as an example, however, my infamous ice cream cone metaphor, however, she expressed some doubts:

"...If it was an ice cream cone, per say, it might make people hungry. Just a thought."

When asked about his reactions to such metaphors, Mr. Jackson was quite clear. "...The excitement goes unchecked throughout my body." Mrs. Ort, on the other hand, is more particular. Only finding excitement "...When it's a really good metaphor—like the leaf of the feet of the thief of Thrud."

When asked to reflect on my interview, an anonymous student stated: "I think it was pretty awesome. The questions you asked really made me think! Yeah! Go Casper!" However, there was one subject who thought differently. "Rather than say exciting, I would say... Interesting." He said. And that brings me to my next point of interest:

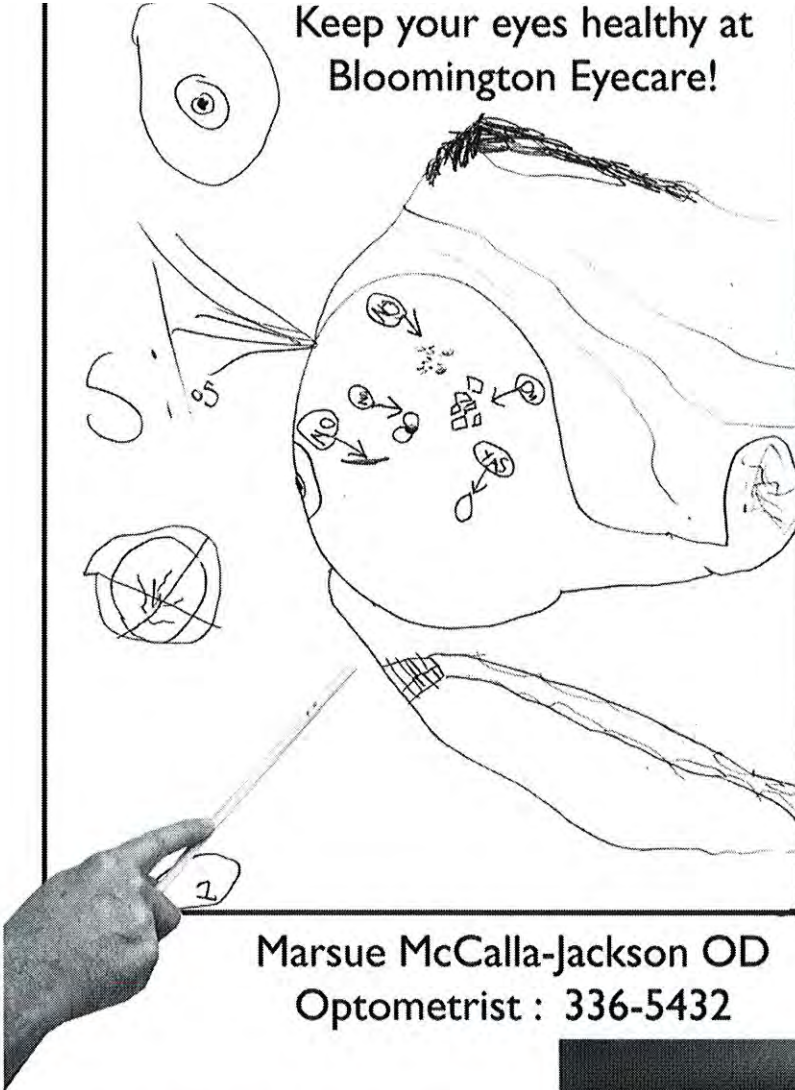

Lance Keller, high school student, expressed fairly unique opinions on perhaps all of my questions. He, apparently, considers pencils to be "...Mundane items that lead inevitably into a set of boring, useless activities designed to stimulate your mind." Shockingly different from Mrs. Ort's description of them being "...exciting because you can write down all sorts of things with them and you can do it in any language and use any writing system you want."

He continued to refute my system of metaphors, claiming that "...It muddles the point and confuses the issue." His conclusion being that "Using metaphors to add interest is like adding oil to lemonade tasties." He did, however, admit that the metaphors I used were exciting, but, he states "My excitement is usually expressed through means of violence and physical contact. Thus few understand my excitement." And thus I, fortunately not having experienced his 'excitement' first hand, concluded my interview with him.

In conclusion, I must say that the populace is indeed excited. I have, for the moment ceased my research on all but one of the subjects mentioned here. I would like to thank them all for their time and vast contributions to my report. As for Mr. Kellar, I have recently collaborated with my newly arisen cult followers, mostly composed of biochemists, and we have agreed that it is best to hold him for further testing. We believe that he may be the long-awaited "Chosen One" but will hold such conclusions until further 'testing' has been done. So long, and 'keep it hip.'

Closing: We want to thank the StarLite Drive-In. (It's a radical concept, watching a movie from your car, but, who knows, it could catch on). And we want to thank the students (and staff) who made the effort to create thoughtful pages. And the yearbook staff who both love & hate the process. And we want to say heartfelt goodbyes to two key individuals who made the Harmony Yearbook special--Gayle Ebel & Zeri Ort. Gayle merged it into her art curriculum. Zeri just made it part of her life, from editing it as a student to contributing as a teacher. Both will be sorely missed. Marty
