Heroic: In the heat of the moment*

From super heroes to real life heroes. From ourselves doing heroic deeds to seeing the heroism in others--our friends, parents, religious figures, movie stars, inventors, artists, writers, political figures, etc.. The idea of "hero" is universal but the concept takes thought and reflection. There are different kinds of heroes--those whose lives are spent "fighting the good fight" to make a better world. And then there are acts of heroism that seemingly come out of nowhere. In truth, we all are capable of being heroes but it takes being in the heat of the moment to make it happen.

Now, having said that, the heroism most of us encounter is not the "running into a burning building" type, but rather, courageously dealing with uncertain futures, emotional unrest, illness, death. Really, the human condition. Both kids and adults share this, but we tend to not acknowledge our own heroism--so we look elsewhere, and that's too bad.

*Please note "heat" reference as reflected in cover, intro, & conclusion graphics--neato, huh?

My dad, Alan F. Boucher, is my hero. He always made time to throw baseball with me, wrestle in the living room, or go for a bike ride. When he punished me, and I definitely deserved it, sometimes I could hear him cry in the other room; I knew it hurt him more than it hurt me. He always tells me he loves me and I have never gotten too big to give him a hug and a kiss. He is not only my hero, but a hero to the multitude of people he saved as a firefighter for 20 years. I can think of no better thing than to be just like my dad.

My hero: Alan W. Watts (1915-1973), philosopher, writer, speaker, Zen practitioner

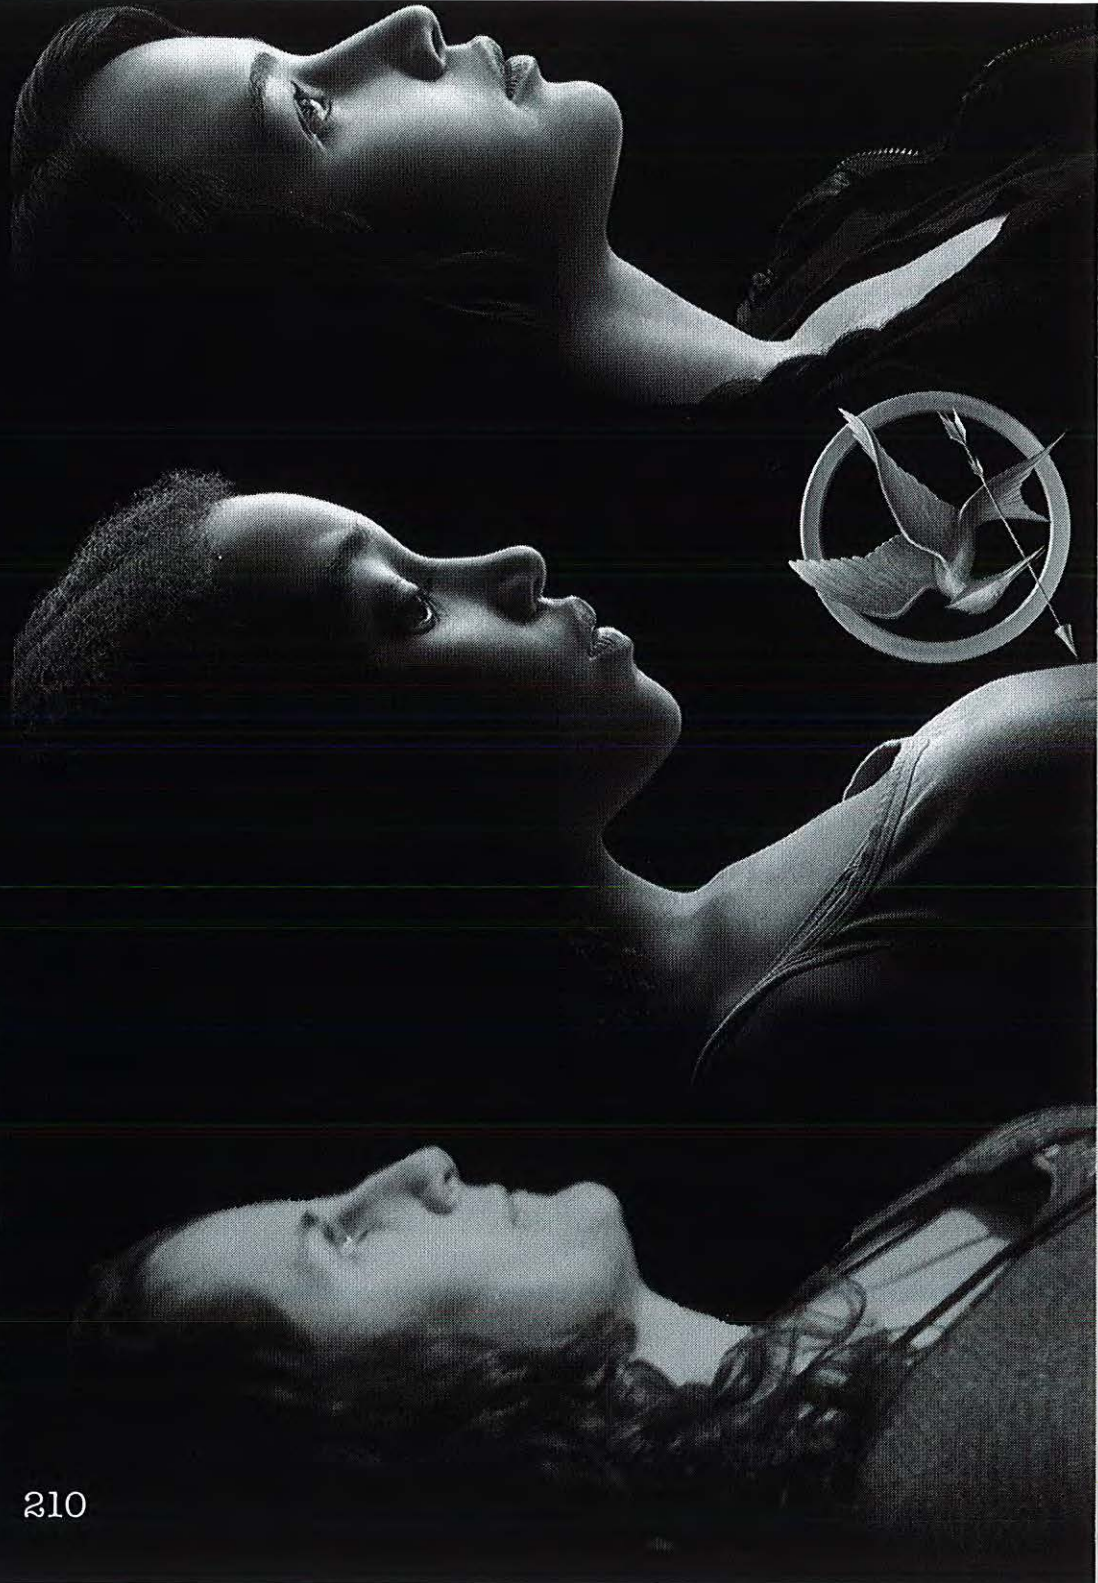

Alan Watts was born in Great Britain and raised in a Western, Christian tradition but later became deeply inspired by Asian spiritual/philosophical traditions and Far Eastern aesthetics. He moved to the United States in 1938 and in the course of his life authored the very ground-breaking Way of Zen, along with a multitude of other very original works introducing traditional Asian philosophies, practices, and aesthetics to Westerners curious about the East. He exerted a particularly significant influence on the unfolding and flourishing youth culture prevalent in the 1960s and served as an important interpreter of those traditional Asian spiritual, philosophical, and cultural currents for contemporary Western people. In my 20s, a very formative season of my life, I voraciously read, pondered, and cherished numerous works of his, and have always considered Alan Watts my hero for helping to blaze a path and for showing me a feasible way of bridging the cultural and spiritual gap between Western and Eastern ways of being, thinking, and living life. He was my first gateway into an understanding of Zen Buddhism, and throughout my life I have deeply valued that wonderful contribution of his.

Richard Asks Jesus to Stop Calling Him

“He just won’t stop calling me!” says 7th grade student Richard Larimer. “Sure, the first and second night were alright. I mean, Jesus is a good conversationalist, but by the third night I was getting tired. Then he started asking things like ‘Hey, let’s get together over the weekend,’ and ‘Let’s go play some golf.’ I decided enough is enough..

Soil Found in Dirt Room

When someone claimed that there was soil in the dirt room, no one believed them. Encouraged to find out once and for all, Ryan began intensive training for his quest. The important thing was to be prepared for the unthinkable, and he packed snow shoes, an inflatable raft, and an English-Portuguese Dictionary. After many days of searching, Ryan finally found that there actually was soil in the dirt room. I can’t believe I actually found soil in the.....

Pokémon Fighting Ring Discovered in Basement

This March Claudio went looking for a dozen or so of his students-he followed a series of odd noises into the project room where he found a circle of 1st and 2nd graders with monopoly money in their hands cheering over a fighting Charmander and Bulbasaur. When confronted the young boys said that this had been a tradition passed down for generations and generations of 1st and 2nd graders. It is now believed that the rattling, banging noises the pipes make were actually Pokémon trying to escape from the dirt room where they are kept.

"Nothing Compares With Mother Bear's"

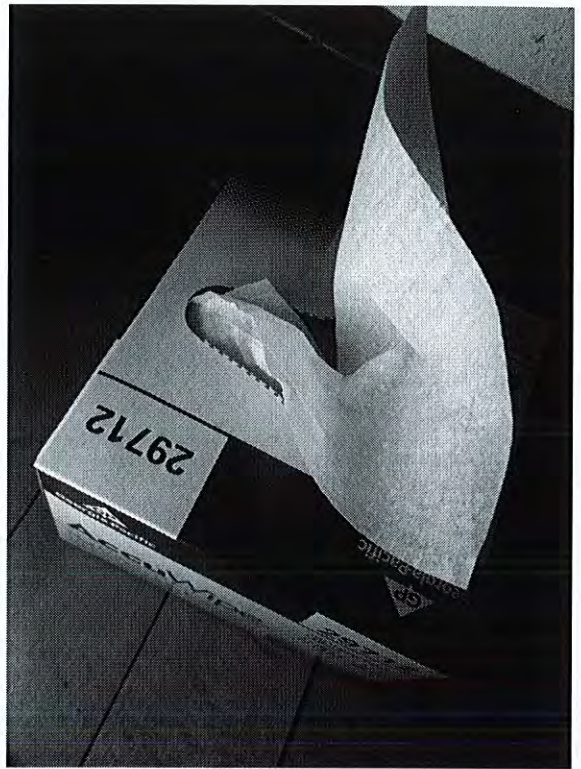

New Middle School Soccer Challenge Workout

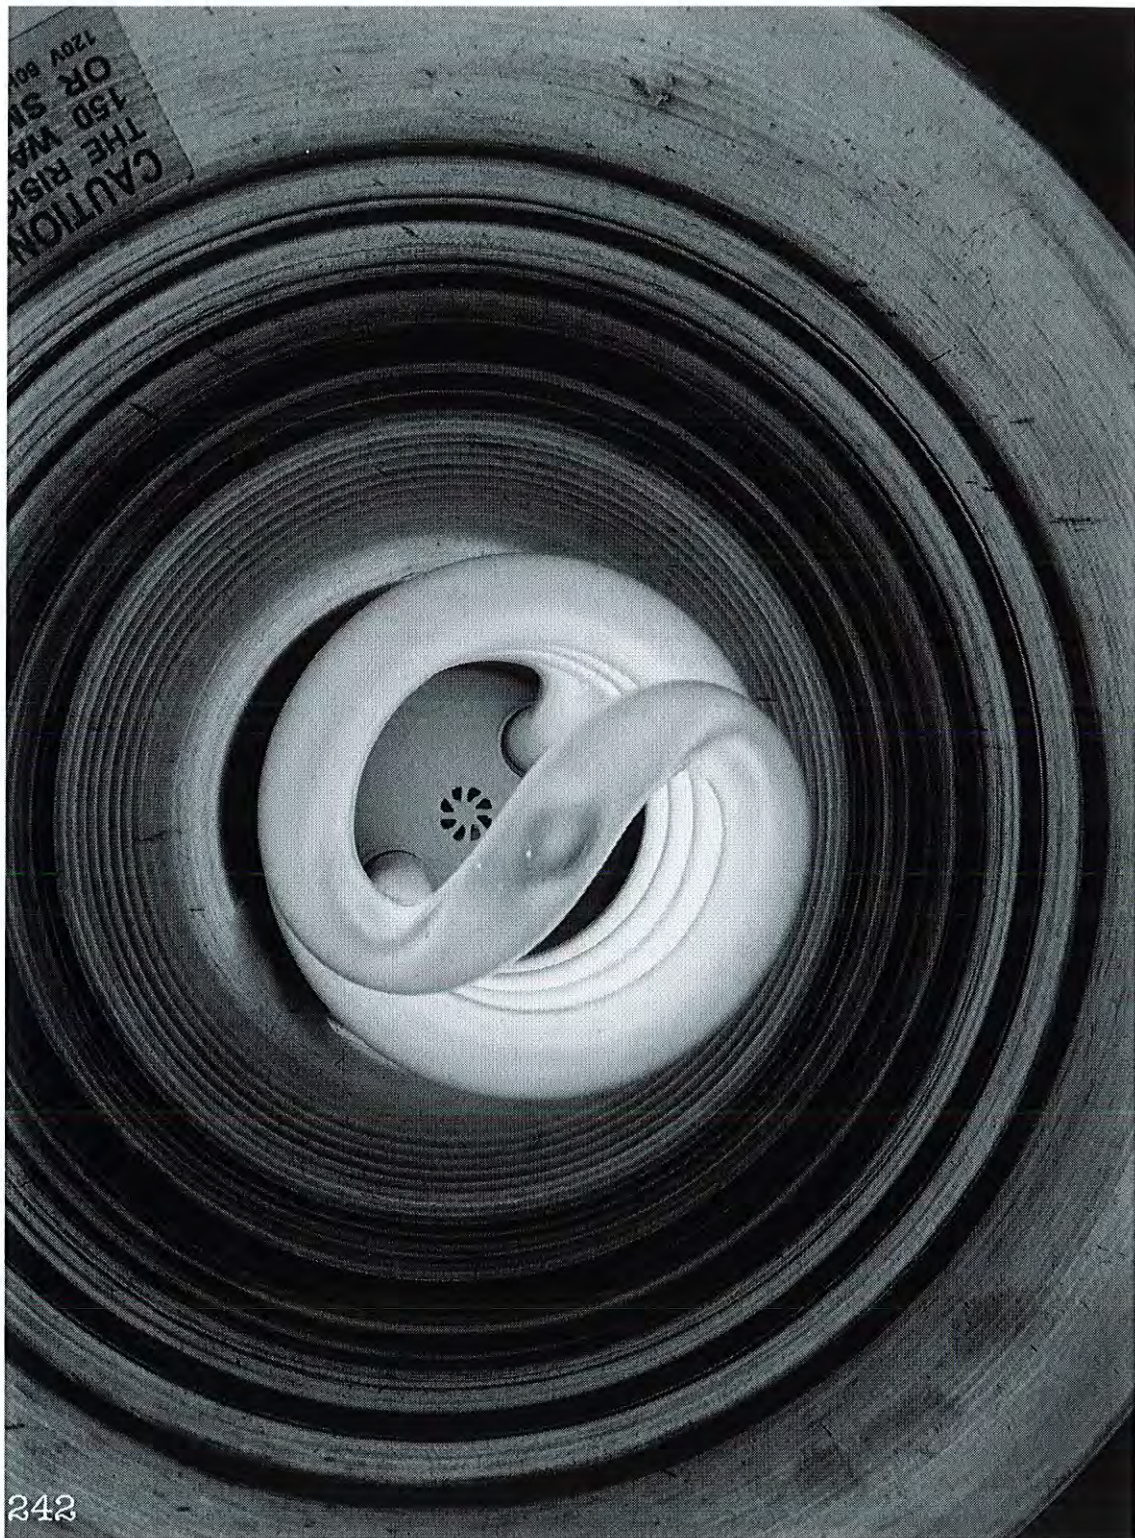

Throughout the years, Harmony middle school has found many different ways to prepare for the soccer challenge. This year, though, has to be the most over the top one of them all. "Our new workout includes lots of head-shaking, jumping, and kicking. It is a great way to prepare our muscles," said one enthusiastic middle school student. Although the 5th and 6th grade says, "They resemble a group of dancing chickens," the middle school acts oblivious. Who knows how this new trend started, and whether it will continue? While the rest of the school looks on and laughs, you can still find a group of middle school students practicing their new 'workout', in random places outside the building .

SOCCER CHALLENGE RIGGED

Middle Schoolers are shown here reading the 5th and 6th grade secret plans.

What began as a friendly competition between Elementary and Middle School students turned dark when it was discovered that Middle School students had been participating in illicit activities that appeared to go back many years.

Two of the Middle Schoolers snuck in to a secret Elementary planning location and stole their book of plans for the soccer challenge.

Nico Rents Self Out As Older Brother

Nico Larimer recently discovered the 27.6% of Harmony students don't have siblings. "I can't imagine their pain and anguish," said Nico. "I know, I'll be their Big Brother and give them brotherly advice," Word spread fast across Harmony, but the concept of Big Brother somehow got altered. Pretty soon Nico ruled the school with autocratic power. This led to the coffee house with room to grow!

Rachael's Cafe grew out of a desire to create a friendly, inclusive, peaceful atmosphere for all. Our mission is to bring understanding, education, and acceptance over a cup of coffee.

We offer gourmet coffees and drinks along with homemade soups, salads, sandwiches and entrees. We believe that high quality, modestly priced food and drinks served in an unashamed, eclectic environment will nurture the meeting and mingling of both friends and strangers. An open mic night will give everyone the chance to express their views or share their talents, including live music and open discussions on diverse topics.

'Bloomington is a fabulous community full of open people - but is lacking a place designed to welcome folks of all walks of life, be it gender, race, religion or whatever your sameness or uniqueness may be,' says owner Rachael Jones.

If you build it they will come... If it's good they will return!

The end:

We want to thank those people that helped create this book-- the yearbook editors & staff, Zeri Ort, Peter Samuelson, Toby Blackwood, Mr Copy, Harmony staff, and all those students who enjoyed the creative challenge of figuring out who their heroes were & translating that knowledge into a yearbook page. --Marty
